SIV members are mostly elderly, many housebound and have limited socialization and exercise options. With the waning of the COVID pandemic, SIV is adding 2 educational and social programs, initially using SIPOA facilities, to enhance the physical and mental fitness of its members.

The new program for which we have firm costs is the "Social Fit" program, a semi-private balance, fitness and grounding program at the SIPOA Lake House, taught by Lake House contractors for $120/week. Strength and balance are critical to avoiding falls and broken bones in the elderly. Classes will be conducted twice per week, starting in March 2022. If needed, we will provide transportation. After the first month, we will evaluate demand and whether we need to charge participants a nominal class fee.

The second new program, for which we have budgeted $1,200, will be a quarterly Education and Socialization event - the next event is April 5, addressing "Life Planning". Costs of each event will vary - we will need to provide stipends and travel costs to some speakers, may need to pay for a facility, and will provide refreshments.

With saving nature, we save ourselves. Rewilding of the Low Country is imperative since 2/3 of the wildlife has disappeared world-wide in the past 5 decades. Without trees, the atmosphere would become depleted. Humans and all life would choke. Our rescues are the garbage-men of the environment. They clean carrion, eat bugs, and also seedpods. By removing dead things, our environment is cleaned. By eliminating ingested seeds in the course of foraging, they replant trees and flowering shrubs needed for sustaining wildlife migrations. KOW's work helps to keep Seabrook healthy and beautiful.

To: Joe Cronin <jcronin@townofseabrookisland.org>

Bcc: "Gruber, Courtney" <CGruber@ycrlaw.com>, Jan Malloy <jan@keeperofthewild.org>

Thank you for allowing us to apply for the Town of Seabrook Island Community Promotion Grant Program.

May I take a moment to explain our application budget? We have 3 major projects that are under consideration right now with our board. One is a physical improvement of a section of the raccoon pre-release area to create an improved environment for the curious babies which eat and finger and dig at everything as babies do. That will be a $20k project. The two other projects are largely a result of the influx of new people to our communities, as a result of Covid. We want to make recently-arrived residents and guests aware of our services, as more animals suffer displacement and injury due to development and traffic. For educating those who are not aware of animal rescue sanctuaries such as ours, we are planning flyers, and interactive website design. The latter project is the one we list as our objective for the use of money that TOSI would be graciously awarding. KOW expects this project to exceed the amount petitioned, and we are prepared to find and fund the balance. KOW has been fortunate to operate without debt, and we are careful to structure our request within the boundaries of our expected financial capacities.

I will also mail a copy of this letter and the completed form, as per the instructions. Thank you for giving us this opportunity to interact with beautiful Seabrook Island. I am sure our rescues claim some happy kinship amongst your native mammals!

Best Regards,

Elisabeth St. John

Mission of Keeper of the Wild Wildlife Rescue and Sanctuary, LLC.

We believe each wild creature has a place on this earth as a part of the web of life, to help keep the earth a balanced and healthy place for all life to live.

It is the mission of Keeper of the Wild Wildlife Rescue and Sanctuary to step in when mammalian wild creatures have been impacted by humans, and are in need, either orphaned, injured or displaced. KOW will rehabilitate them, while nurturing their wild instincts, and when the time is right, return them to their place in the wild, all the while trusting in nature's plan.

History and Philosophy

Keeper of the Wild is a nonprofit organization dedicated to rescuing, rehabilitating and releasing orphaned and injured native South Carolina mammalian wildlife. Our Founder, Director, and President, Janet Kinser, began operating a private rehabilitation center in Charleston years ago. Since that time, Janet and the volunteers have rescued, rehabilitated and relocated thousands of animals. Janet's dream was to develop a sanctuary and clinic to support wildlife rehabilitation and in November 2001 that dream became a reality.

Janet and the volunteers selflessly dedicate themselves to the animals of South Carolina. We are not an agency of the state and we receive no state funds. Our trained volunteers are knowledgeable about the species they serve. Care is taken to preserve the natural wild instincts essential for survival in the wild. They are not kept as pets but given a natural, safe environment while rehabilitating with others of their kind and provided with specie specific food and care.

Keeper of the Wild needs and depends on the donations of caring supporters through private donations and fundraising events to continue our work. You can donate through PayPal at www.keeperofthewild.org, by Venmo (@keeper_wild) or by mail to Keeper of the Wild, 1606 Coolers Dairy Road, Walterboro, SC 29488.

Our wildlife education programs, presented to schools and other community organizations, strive to teach people the responsibility we all have to work in partnership with nature. We believe all life is interdependent and all people must do their part to keep our earth a strong and efficiently functioning home for all life. We want to encourage people to enjoy the beauty and gifts all around us. (If interested in scheduling a program, contact Early Mitchum at possumlady1957@yahoo.com).

She cares for the critters Keeper of the Wild founder feels called by God to help injured, orphaned animals

DAVID QUICK
FEB 8, 2013

A raccoon recovering from a hip injury, likely caused by a car, grips the fingers of Keeper of the Wild's Janet Kinser while recovering at Dorchester Veterinary Hospital.

Of all the orphaned and injured mammals that the nonprofit Keeper of the Wild volunteers to treat, the raccoon is the one that adorns the shirt of its founder and director, Janet Kinser.

For a woman who has a missionary-like calling to save animals that she often refers to as “babies,” the raccoon is special because of a heart-breaking experience in the late 1980s.

An animal control officer had brought her an orphaned raccoon, which Kinser named “Annie.” Kinser later learned that the raccoon had a heart defect.

“Annie wasn’t growing the way she should. One day, she started going downhill. I went to all the vets trying to get help, and none would help me because she was a raccoon,” recalls Kinser of the aversion many have toward raccoons because of the animal’s potential for carrying rabies.

On her last stop at a vet clinic in Mount Pleasant, Kinser was turned away one final time.

“I sat in the parking lot and watched little Annie die right there. And I just boo-hooed,” says Kinser, recalling that she then prayed.

“I said, ‘God, you’re going to have to get somebody else to do this. It hurts too much.’ A sweet voice spoke back to me, ‘But what about all the other Annies? Are you going to let the ministry die for all the other Annies?’ ”

Listening to that voice has given Kinser the strength to endure more than witnessing the suffering of animals since she started Keeper of the Wild 25 years ago and made it an official nonprofit in 2000.

The 61-year-old is a hands-on volunteer leader who has logged hundreds of thousands of miles and often struggled to pay for gas, upkeep of vehicles and medications and other supplies.

Without volunteers and a very supportive husband, she stresses, Keeper of the Wild would not exist as it does today.

Seven local veterinary clinics and at-home trained rehabilitators combine to pick up close to 4,000 orphaned and injured mammals in nine coastal counties of South Carolina, from Horry to Jasper, every year. Many animals are released on large plantations where the owners welcome them.

The structure of the organization is described as a wheel, with Kinser being the hub and the volunteers the spokes, which, like the spokes of a wheel, can be vulnerable.

The recession hit Keeper of the Wild hard, not only in donations but in volunteers. Many had to stop helping because their families lost jobs and even homes.

Kinser had to reorganize efforts, leaning harder on veterinarians to keep and treat animals. Those veterinarians include Pet Vet and Veterinary Specialty Care in Mount Pleasant, Bee’s Ferry Veterinary Clinic and Charleston Veterinary Referral Center in West Ashley, Dorchester Veterinary Hospital and Veterinary Emergency Care in North Charleston and Maybank Animal Hospital on James Island.

Dr. Brian King, owner of Pet Vet, has been working with Keeper of the Wild for about 14 years and describes Kinser as “an amazing woman who works tirelessly for wildlife.”

King, who also serves on the board of Keeper of the Wild, says that while few offer rehabilitation and release of mammals in the area, it's a rewarding experience.

"I really believe in and have grown to love this organization and Janet," says King.

Dr. Bruce MacKinnon, owner of Dorchester Veterinary Hospital, says if it weren't for the efforts of Kinser and her volunteers, most of the animals would die.

Debby Hill, a retired first-grade teacher and volunteer education director for Keeper of the Wild, says the common denominator among everyone who volunteers with the group is a deep love of animals.

Kinser, however, has something more.

"She's a very, very giving person and has a special place in her heart for these little creatures," says Hill, who also handles the raising and reintroduction of orphaned fawns.

"We love her heart and what she does, but we also worry about her, especially during baby season (spring), when she wears herself out."

Kinser started her professional life as an interior decorator, but the signs that pointed her to her mission were apparent from early childhood.

"I've always loved animals since I was a child. I was always bringing something into the house, like a baby bird, and Mama was always telling me to take it back," she recalls.

On her radical departure from interior design, Kinser likes to note that "people joked I traded in my high heels for snake boots."

The Fayetteville, N.C., native moved to Summerville with her first husband, who worked for the Kroger supermarket chain.

She married her second husband, James Kinser, shortly after she started rehabilitating animals.

He has loyally stuck by her and her mission through often frustrating times. Until 2000, she took care of many of the animals at their house.

"My problem is that I love my wife and I want her to do whatever makes her happy," says Kinser, who rents properties and runs a home remodeling business.

"She is dedicated to saving these animals and spends all her time on the road picking them up," he says, adding that he believes in the cause, too.

"We want to do whatever we can to help these animals," he says.

Janet Kinser knows that many don't feel for common animals as they do for more exotic or endangered animals or their pets, but she challenges anyone who questions their worth.

She recalls an education talk she gave when she took a fawn, an otter and possum, the latter of which had been kicked and suffered a spinal injury.

A man came up to her and questioned why she treated "nuisance" animals, especially a possum "because they are so ugly."

"I told him, 'To tell God that his creation and what he cared enough to put on this Earth is not good enough to take care of ... that he didn't do a good enough job — that's simple arrogance.

"If he created a creature and it needs help, we're going to love it and take it in," she says.

"Our babies aren't the elite animals, such as beautiful tigers or lions. They are little guys laying on the side of the highway that people consider nuisance or expendable.

"We are a ministry, and I feel with all my heart that as long as God gives us this job, we have to do it."
